

Push Creative Protest, Dr. Martin King Urges

PETERSBURG — The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. admonished nearly 2,000 students, staff members and visitors at Virginia State College to remain awake through a great revolution" during an all-college assembly sponsored by the Virginia State College Inter-Fraternal Council.

Now president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference with headquarters in Atlanta, Dr. King said that there were three things which must be done in order for the Negro to stay awake.

THE SPEAKER urged rising above individualistic pursuits and achieving a world perspective. He also called for excellence in every field of endeavor and advised continuance of "creative protest."

He reminded the audience that all gains which have been made by the Negro have come through persistent and creative pressure. He insisted that "there is no need for immoral means to achieve moral ends." The method of non-violence as demonstrated through the leadership of India's Gandhi says that the means must be as powerful as the ends.
